The song that made the ebbinger bard Elia Aep Bullgoh famous before her death in 1276. And which reflected quite faithfully the complicated relationship of Putnam and Tubiel. Not as popular as The Woven Storm by Calloneta but close to it. A more positive and encouraging song, and not so slow.

Verse 1:

A protector's heart, wild and free

With a noble cause, to set the wrongs right

A blade in hand, a tempest to be

A lioness in the night, a sight of might

A knight's spirit, shining bright

With a heavy load, but a purpose true

An eagle's eyes, a world to spy

A protector of all, that's who

Chorus:

Their love is a dangerous game

A balance they can never claim

With a lioness's wild heart and a griffin's pride

They'll face the storms, side by side

Verse 2:

A mystery, a love to explore

A tempestuous ride, never a bore

With longing and heartache, and lust

They'll fight for their love, never to rust

But the years are not kind, with their toll

For the lioness's wild heart and the griffin's soul

Their love is a battle, with no end

For love knows no bounds, it will transcend

Verse 3:

In a cave, where the monsters reside

They found each other, side by side

Faced a chimera, with courage and might

Their bond, forever was sealed that night

Chorus:

Their love is a dangerous game

A balance they can never claim

With a lioness's wild heart and a griffin's pride

They'll face the storms, side by side

Outro:

Their love is a dangerous game
